ABSTRACT. The article takes the item andamio (scaffold), which appears in the title of the magazine, which to go all over the description of this type by the main general dictionaries of the Spanish language. Subsequently collects new information provided by some of the Spanish corpus, preferably RAE's Corpes XXI; continues with frequent combinations, provided by applications, such as those Corpes XXI and Sketchengine tools offer; Grammar is the last query to refine the plural andamios which is often used; it is the last search for new information using historical data. The findings highlight the need for a new approach to lexical dictionaries of the Spanish language.

KEY WORDS. Lexicography, monolingual dictionary, Spanish language, corpora use, lexical combinations.

DICTIONARY AND ENUNCIATION: THE TREATMENT OF PROSTITUTION IN THE DRAE

María Ángeles Calero Fernández

ABSTRACT. This article reviews the evolution in the treatment of prostitution's lexicon in the Real Academia's Diccionario de la Lengua Española (DRAE). The aim is to identify the presence of subjective features in academic lexicographical work, particularly if the new edition prepared for the end of 2014 (twenty-third edition) retains ideological elements detected in the 2001 edition (twenty-second edition). This study explores the macro- (list of headwords) and the microstructure (definitions and register marks) from discourse analysis and it verifies the low number of improvements have been made to reduce this subjectivity.

KEY WORDS. Spanish lexicography, dictionary and ideology, discourse analysis, Royal Spanish Academy, prostitution's lexicon.

LEXICOGRAPHY SPANISH AND LATIN AMERICAN SPANISH

Luz Fernández Gordillo

ABSTRACT. The domain that was exercised by the Royal Spanish Academy on non academic dictionaries, mainly in the treatment of the spanish of the spanish-speaking Latin-american countries, along with the evolution that took the Latin-american spanish, prevented a substantial progress in the overall spanish lexicography at both sides of the Atlantic, which broke with the emergence of national dictionaries, the peninsular spanish and Mexican spanish, during the twentieth century, and the national of argentinian spanish, during the XXI. Knowledge of this situation and the assessment of dictionaries, particularly as containers of social memory and cultural values of a community, is the main contribution of this article.

KEY WORDS. Monolingual lexicography, academic dictionary, national dictionary, Latin-american spanish dictionary, general language dictionary.

ON THE SELF-KNOWLEDGE OF THE SPANISH LEXICON OF MEXICO. EPITOME

Octavio Cano Silva

ABSTRACT. In our paper we tackle the topic of the knowledge of Mexican Spanish vocabulary through several types of dictionaries registering it. We make an historical overview recalling the impact of Spanish on the autochthonous people, as well as some remarks on the influence of the Castillian norm, as the leading norm, on Mexican Spanish. We also offer points of analysis for the knowledge of the privative and we analyze the theoretical tendencies of actual lexicography in registering Mexican Spanish.

ANALYSIS CONSULTATIONS OF MEXICO SPANISH DICTIONARY ONLINE

Alfonso Medina Urrea

ABSTRACT. In this study, frequencies and geographic and temporal dispersions of queries made, between August 2012 and September 2013, to the online Dictionary of Mexican Spanish are examined. They are used to compute an index that allows selection of those queries that are most common in more places and during the longest time span. On the one hand, the statistical basis that led to this dictionary's current nomenclature can be evaluated by means of this index. On the other hand, unanswered queries with highest index values can be considered candidates for future nomenclatures.

KEY WORDS. Dictionary of Mexican Spanish, lexical acquisition, query frequency, query's geographical dispersion, query's temporal dispersion.

REIFICATION AS A RECOGNITION OBLIVION. NOTES FOR A REVIEW OF THE IDEA OF REIFICATION OF AXEL HONNETH

Martín Fleitas González

ABSTRACT. This work aims at analyzing the scopes and limitations of the reformulation which Axel Honneth proposed of the idea of reification during his Tanner lectures in 2005. In order to defend the contributions which a concept of reification as forgetfulness of recognition may embrace, Honneth's proposal is rebuilt as opposed to the great number of objections it has received. The central argument here is to show that the weaknesses of Honneth's reification have to do with the weaknesses of his "receptive model" of recognition. As a consequence this work explores the possibility of substituting the Honnethian concept of recognition with an ontological-analytical one to outline then the scope of a reification understood as gradual moments of amnesia.

KEY WORDS. Reification, forgetfulness, recognition, Axel Honneth, amnesia.

LOGICISM AND ANALYTICITY. FREGE AND CARNAP, TWO LOGICIANS PROPOSALS

Jesús Jasso Méndez

ABSTRACT. Different research programs in philosophy have defined the notions of analyticity and apriority. Contemporary perspectives: Boghossian (2000), Peacocke (2000), Kitcher (1980, 2000), Horwich (2000) —just to mention some cases— face the problem of defining the extension of such concepts. The purpose of this paper is: to offer the reader, in a single useful article, a fine and delimited analysis of the paradigmatic logicist definition of analyticity that cause the contemporary discussions: Frege (1879, 1874) and ii. Carnap (1935, 1947). In this way, the reader will have the conceptual tools to follow properly the classical and contemporary controversy available on this matter, in philosophy of language, philosophy of logic and the epistemology.

EMILE DURKHEIM AND THE SOCIOLOGICAL THEORY OF ACTION

Federico Lorenc Valcarce

ABSTRACT. The problem of human action in the Durkheimian sociological theory has often been ignored. This article intends to address this problem. To do this, I first introduce a simple but radical analysis of the main concepts of Durkheim's sociology —social fact, collective representations, morality— to find there some elements of a theory of social action, then try to reconstruct how the author uses some categories within the semantics of action (motive, means, purpose, effort, desire, intention), and finally present selected concrete analysis that are rarely considered as elements of a theoretical discourse, but may serve as a reference to enrich the general outlines of the theory of action.

KEY WORDS. Durkheim, action, sociological theory, norms, representations.

PUBLIC POLICIES TO SECOND ORDER IN LATIN AMERICA

Arturo Vallejos-Romero y Patricio Valdivieso

ABSTRACT. This article discusses the complexities faced social by public policies to give satisfactory answers in the context of societies functionally differentiated. From the approximation of the theory of social systems argues for second order policies that facilitate transformation processes and social actors that works according to their own logic of operation. It illustrates the problems of the first order approximations, command and control, with the Latin American and Chilean experience in particular.

RECREATE REALITY: THE EMERGENCE OF ETHNOGRAPHIC FILM AT THE ACADEMY

Olatz González Abrisketa

ABSTRACT. This paper discusses the emergence of ethnographic film in the academy as a conceptual encouragement for Anthropology and identifies resistances to quality filmmaking framed in this discipline. It argues that ethnographic filmmaking should put the specificity of film activity before any pedagogical or illustrative aims. In short, it believes that reality must precede the search for meaning.

BEING FOR DEATH: THE ECSTATIC TIME AND TIME MEMORY

Rosaura Martínez Ruiz

ABSTRACT. The fundamental concern analyzed in this paper is the question concerning a time that occidental philosophy as metaphysics has historically overlooked: the future. I start from looking at Heidegger's analysis of temporality that the existential analysis of Dasein unveils and that he names "ecstatic time", the time of Derrida's différance as displacement and, finally, the time of psychic memory that Freud recognizes as après-coup, since all these three temporal phenomena are paradigmatic to think time as possibility besides presence.

KEY WORDS. Ecstatic temporality, memory, Derrida's phenomenology, Freudian psyche, dead.
